[Published by Request.]

On the Death of Ann T. — Born April 2nd, 1840. Died August 8th, 1857.

Mourn not for her—she is at rest,
Far, far beyond the stormy skies,
There gathering clouds no longer dim
The sunlight of her beautiful eyes;
There with the glorious, blood-washed band,
She dwells in love and union sweet
Where conscious mind the last farewell,
Not mournful sound of passing feet.

The bloom of health was on her cheek,
The light of hope in her beautiful eyes;
She looked like one too pure to live,
Too bright and beautiful to die;
But she relentless power came,
And touched her with his blighting hand,
And like a bird from prison free,
She fled into the spirit-land.

Too frail for this bleak world of ours,
And God has kindly called her up,
To bloom amid celestial flowers,
Safe as the breeze that wafts her wings.

The death-spirit of her bosom stole,
And gently as the morning dew,
Arose to heaven her ransomed soul.

Ye stricken ones! Forget your grief,
Your lovely child has fled to heaven,
Where parting words are heard no more,
And love's bright chain is never torn;
She is a flower in Paradise,
A jewel on her Saviour's brow,
Your loss is her eternal gain,
Weep not, she is an angel now.

BY C. M. KENDALL.

A Capital Story.

AUNT SALLY'S MUFF.

BY C. M. KENDALL.

Miss Sally Strong was a peculiar woman. For sixty years she had retained her name, which actually suited her hardy nature, and the man having the assurance to ask her to exchange it for her own, would have been a rare companion for Cummings in his tiger-hunts in the jungles of Africa. At least, no one in the village of B— would dare to question his manhood.

She was one of those who seemed to have been born in a rugged, mountainous region. Before she arrived at her teens, she used to stomp the loys with malignant delight; and ere she was out of them, her contempt for the opposite sex was so strikingly manifest, that all prudent young men, if accidentally introduced to her, would have been glad to avoid a meeting, would very quietly cross to the other side and allow her the whole of it.

Yet she was a privileged person, and people would smile at an ill-natured remark from her as though it were a comedy. In the Mercantile Court for her assistance of James H. HANLAN, Esq., who will in future attend to his legal matters. Special attention given to collections. Office on Cross street, opposite North end of Court House.
June 19, 57.

One nephew, however, did not belong to this class of schemers. On the contrary, he was a very different person, a victim of his jokes, and he would dispute with her just for the fun of having a hot argument. Yet for any real service, she would often apply to him to any one else. She had even loaned him a sum sufficient to stock a fine horse, but still his business was so off-hand and vexed her, that his opinion—extending, no further, of course, than the limits of this village—was about equally divided as to whether he would be the favorite heir, or be cut off with a shilling.

One evening, upon the meeting of the parish sewing circle at the house of the elderman, this nephew perpetrated a joke upon his aunt, the result of which she never forgot. She, unlike most maiden ladies, considered these gatherings a sort of fashionable nuisance, but usually was present in order to indulge in her sarcastic remarks. Her nephew was there, too, and he was waiting for his aunt to make a remark, which he would then retort with a rejoinder.

"Where may these objects of your great pity reside?"
"O, in Siam, Burmah, and other like places."
"Indeed! Well, heavy woolen shirts are very scarce in those countries, upon my word, for people living under a tropical sun. They will doubtless be very grateful for clothing so suited to their climate."
"Well done, aunt!" exclaimed Frederick. "A good shot and no mistake! But these circles are grand affairs, after all."
"Grand affairs, indeed, for young men to say soft things, and silly girls to listen to them! Grand affairs to dispense the accumulated gossip of a month—Grand affairs for scandal moving, and for everything but the purpose they profess!"

her so much in the abstract that he was content to remain silent. Having achieved such a moral victory, the lady continued in unbroken good humor during the rest of the evening.

When the party broke up, as Frederick was taking leave of his young friends with his aunt upon one arm and the fair Lucy upon the other, the old lady suddenly remembered she had left her muff.

"O, never mind, aunt," said the young man. "I will get it and send it up to you in the morning."
"But I don't mind Fred. Strong, for it is not my way to leave things about in this manner. But where can it be? I certainly left it with my bonnet and cloak."
"Where can it be?" echoed all her affectionate friends, driving into sundry places in their eagerness to assist in the search.

"Somebody must have taken it," cried one of the young men.
"For aunt's muff is unlike all others," said another.
"That is as true," said Fred, laughing, "as a barrel is unlike a two-gallon keg." And he gave Lucy a mischievous glance, which she interpreted to mean that he knew the whereabouts of the missing article better than any one else.

"It certainly is not with any of the ladies' things," said one of the young relations.
"O, plague upon you all!" was the kind reply. "I must hunt it up myself. I suppose."
"Aunt Sally, you have not taken aunt's muff by mistake, have you?" asked Fred, maliciously.

That functionary drew himself up stiffly, as though the imputation was unworthy of an answer, and stepped aside. "Well, I never!" exclaimed one of the young ladies.
"Who could have done it?" added another.

"Be silent—will you?" cried the irritated maiden; "or tell me where I can find it." It is in Deacon Gray's hat, pressed in so tightly that we cannot remove it. "O, be upon you, aunt! Such a hint and the deacon only a recent widow!" exclaimed the laughing nephew.

Aunt Sally seized her muff, but the adhered most affectionately to it. By and by, she turned to her nephew, and the unoffending but few across the entry, projected by the vigorous foot of the unlearned maiden. When it arrived at the terminus of its short journey, it had assumed a most questionable shape, and its condition might certainly have been termed "shocking bad."

"I will pay you for this young man," said So far as I am concerned, you are entirely welcome.
"You will perhaps tell me that you have had no hand in this matter?"
"No, I will tell you, to the best of my ability, the whole truth, as much or more than upon yourself."

"At best it is but an ill trick you have played upon me, and now mark my words: You shall have reason to regret even this to the latest day of your existence."
"As you please, aunt, since you take it so seriously, but I didn't think a silly joke would have thus offended you."
Time passed on, and young Strong prospered famously in his business. He had amassed sufficient means to be enabled to repay his aunt the sum of real estate stock, etc., she had become a perfect alchemist, turning all into gold.

The neighbors looked on and wondered but none ventured to remonstrate with her. She was often seen to visit the office of Squire A—, and it was rumored that she was making the final arrangements for her husband's property after her decease. The affair of the muff was not forgotten, and it was current with the good villagers that Fred would have to pay dearly for that joke.

known to have large sums of money at various banks, but all this the anxious relatives ascertained was drawn out a few days before her death. Squire A— was consulted, who had drafted the will, but he stoutly maintained that the will covered the whole of her property, and he had nothing further to do with it.

One evening, about six months after the old lady's death, while Frederick was conversing with his wife, the subject of the muff was introduced.
"That was a costly joke of yours, dear Fred," said his wife gaily.

"But I got the muff, at all events, Lucy, and what is better, no one has come forward to claim the three thousand dollars which she loaned me, I feel confident that she intended to present it to me, and therefore destroyed my note."
"Let us have a look at the old relic, Fred, if the mortals have not eaten it up wholly. I will return it to you."

The muff was produced, and, as Lucy predicted, the lining was woefully moth-eaten.
"My dear wife, you must look to this for I prize it dearly as good Aunt Sally's account. I think you had better rip out the lining, and renovate the whole with amorphous."

Lucy took her scissors and commenced at once upon the task.
"What can the old lady have stuffed it with, I wonder? Why, Fred, instead of cotton, she has wadded it with dirty brown paper!"
"Dirty brown paper, indeed!" exclaimed her husband, springing from his chair and catching her hand, as she was about to throw a bunch of it into the grate. Why, it is bank notes, or I am dreaming."

The mystery of the word "contents" was now explained. Note after note was drawn out until more than thirty thousand dollars lay on the table before them. A letter was also found from the aunt, which stated that she always intended him as her heir. His own note also came to light from which it became known that the new revenue to all. It is a famous affair for six months among the villagers, but Frederick and his fair wife kept on the even tenor of their way—respecting by far themselves. One evening, during each year, they opened their splendid mansion to all. It was known as the anniversary of "Aunt Sally's Muff."

An Amusing Sketch.

Comical Adventures of a Wild Student.

The following is a passage from the laughable tale of "Desperation," one of the rich articles which are embraced in the "Library" remains of the late Willis Gaylord Clark. It is only necessary to promise to the student of the Philadelphia student, who, after a stolen fortnight amidst the gaieties of a Washington season, finds himself (through the recalcitrance of a chaperon) at Baltimore, on his way home without a penny in his pocket. He stops at a fashionable hotel, nevertheless, where, after tarrying a day or two, he finally, at the heels of a great dinner, "unwinds" in his private apartment, flanked with an abundance of Champagne and Burgundy, and with his hand to his forehead, murmuring, "Summons a servant, he says."

"Ask the landlord to step up to my room and bring his bill."
He clattered down stairs giggling, and shortly thereafter his master appeared. He entered with a generous smile, that made him look like a host, and he said, "How much do I owe you?"
He handed me the bill, with all the grace of private expectancy.

"Let me see—seventeen dollars!"
"Very reasonable. But, my dear sir, I will tell you, to the best of my ability, the whole truth, as much or more than upon yourself."
"At best it is but an ill trick you have played upon me, and now mark my words: You shall have reason to regret even this to the latest day of your existence."
"As you please, aunt, since you take it so seriously, but I didn't think a silly joke would have thus offended you."

Time passed on, and young Strong prospered famously in his business. He had amassed sufficient means to be enabled to repay his aunt the sum of real estate stock, etc., she had become a perfect alchemist, turning all into gold.

spoke a bed. Everything was fresh and neat, every servant attentive; all argued well. I kept myself closely cloaked, puffed a cigar, and retired to bed to mature my plot.

"Waiter, just brush my clothes well, my fine fellow," said I, in the morning, as he entered my room. "Mind my boots; don't spill anything from the pockets; there is money in both."
"Don't see no pantaloon?"
"Can't tell, I am sure; I don't know," said the fellow, who I later learned was a publican with me in an instant.

I had risen and worked my face before the glass into a Swedish look of indifference.
"Good!" exclaimed I, with a forceful nod. "I have been rubbed in my face with a cold cream, and my hair is just what I want. This is a pretty hotel. And this is the way you fulfill the injunctions of scripture! I am a stranger, and find myself taken in with a vengeance. You shall be exposed, and at once, if my money is not returned to me!"

"Pray keep your temper," said the agitated publican, "I have just opened this house, and it is getting a good run of custom; would you ruin its reputation for an accident? The villain who has robbed you shall be found out, and you shall get your money back for your missing garments. Your money shall be refunded. Now, sir, do you not see that your anger is useless? I did not mean to reproach you. Now, if those trousers can be done to-day, I shall be satisfied, for time is more precious than money. You may keep the others if you find them, and in exchange for the one hundred and fifty dollars which you gave me the contents are yours."

The next evening with new inexpressibles and one hundred and forty dollars in my pocket, I called on my clever guardian in Philadelphia for six months. He gave me with a letter I shall not soon forget. I enclosed the money back to my honorable landlord by the first post, settled my other bill at old crusty's, the first publican, and got my trunk by mail.

Song of the Deceit.
There was an old deacon,
And his mouth was
gaping wide;
The revery one, had cheeked away and left its crystal side;
And the wind
went humming
bumping,
as it sailed its sides it flew,
and through the reed like hollow neck
the wind went blew.
I placed it in the window, where the blast was blowing free, and fanned that its pale mouth sank the queer strains to me. "They tell me, my conqueror! The plague has slain his lord, and his hand is on his forehead, saying of the very best of men, but suffrunt never wrought as it in with or malice, on the innocent them—they shrink before my breath; and year by year
—my thousands tread the diminal road of death."

THEY TELL ME—They tell of huge rats on the line of the Ohio Canal, and one of them is said to have towed a boat, using his tail for a tow line!
That might do for Lilliput, where Gulliver describes a rat the size of a cow!

REWARD.—A countryman passing over a railroad in Northern New York, which is probably slow, asked the conductor why a cow catcher was attached to the rear car instead of the usual place; he was informed by that officer that it was "in order to prevent the cows from that road from running into the train!"

YOU CAN'T GET along in the world with a lonely wife. She'll spend half her time in looking in the glass, and turn, and twist, and brush, and fix till she gets completely vexed with her own ugliness, and she'll go right off and spank the baby!

A young lady, says one of our exchanges, remarked to a male friend that she feared she would make a poor sailor. The gentleman promptly answered—"Probably, but I'm sure you would make an excellent mat!"

A young lady explained to a printer the other day, the distinction between printing and publishing, and at the conclusion of her remarks, by way of illustration, she said:—"You may print a book upon my check, but you must not publish it!"
